THE ROGUE MONOLITH

Four things she carries every day.
One object she actually wants to.

One object. Four jobs.

1

Water chamber

500 ml · 12 h hot / 24 h cold · Double wall

3

Stowed Nano-umbrella

hydrophobic canopy, released from the magnetic base

2

Detachable thermal mug

the cap twists off into a proper espresso cup

4

Dedicated lipstick vault

separately sealed core that never touches water

Six moments it earns its place.

1 The commute out One object leaves the desk instead of four. A hand stays free for the phone, the files, the lift button.	2 The 3 PM client meeting Twist the cap, pour a coffee, touch up the lipstick in the lift, walk in composed. Nothing was left behind.	3 Monsoon, unannounced Rain in Bangalore doesn't warn anyone. The umbrella is already with her because it was never a separate decision.
4 Airport and long-haul Empty through security, filled at the gate, mug for the flat white, umbrella for the taxi rank on arrival.	5 Gym to dinner Hydration during, lipstick after, no second bag for the change of plan. The object handles the plan changing.	6 Weddings and Events Heels, no hands, unpredictable weather. One thing to hold — and it happens to look worth holding.

One purchase decision replaces four carrying decisions, every single day, for years.

This started with VOGUE.

The tote bag on her shoulder is already full — laptop, charger, files, wallet. So the rest of the day goes in her hands: a bottle, a mug, an umbrella because it is Bengaluru, and a lipstick that never found a pocket. Four objects, two hands, and a commute that gets slower and more irritating every evening.

“There should be one thing to lift.
Not four.”

WHAT SHE CARRIES BY HAND

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1 | Lipstick
loose at the bottom of everything |
| 2 | Bottle
always half empty, never put down |
| 3 | Mug
the one she likes, not the paper one |
| 4 | Umbrella
carried every day, opened rarely |

She will leave the office with one hand free.

ROUGE

Thank you.

One object she actually wants to carry.
